June and Boyd traveled frequently eventually purchasing a motor home. Annual trips to Tucson, Arizona were a highlight. They loved the history and visiting with their nephew Marc Lunsford and his family. June particularly loved

Native American history and cared deeply for them. She visited reservations on her travels and collected Native American art and jewelry. Their trekking took them throughout the United States and Canada.

While in Bloomington, she was an active member of First Assembly of God Church where she taught the Daisy class. After retirement, her time was filled with volunteer work. She began volunteering at the Bloomington Hospital along with her mother. She spent years working at the Opportunity House in Bloomington, serving as their director. She cared for her husband at home until he succumbed to Alzheimer's disease in 2012.
