“ Everyone will remember the Derby King that's the first thing that I can share with you all my dad didn't have any boys he had four girls and I of course filled that role of the boy I was ornery and I could ride any motorcycle around and so he had me in the derby car at 11 doing figure eights and hitting stuff and whatever you could hit in it without hurting something too awful bad I ended up winning a few derbies but the funnest part was my dad's face and the pride he'd have when we did well my dad then became a grandfather and my son became his pride and joy anyone that knew my daddy knew Carson was everything to him and it breaks my heart that he's not going to be there to see him get married or have his first child and it's killing me inside with everything he's now resting peacefully with Kelly and I hope they're celebrating and talking about his life here on Earth and how me and Brooke are doing and the rest of the family of course he'll always be missed in my heart you'll always be missed I love you Daddy

“ My dad... was everything. He was the superhero in almost all of my stories. He made sure his girls and grand babies had what they needed, wanted, and that they were taken care of. He never lied to me and never sugar coated a single piece of advice. I loved him for his honesty. Most people can't say their dad helped build this and that school, hospital... demolition derby cars. Most people can't say they were on a national tv show for a whole season. My dad had friends who could recognize his kids just by looking at us. I'll never forget and never stop sharing his love and memories. I love you daddy. So Much. -Vern
