“ How very sorry I am to hear of Ruth's death. I've known her since at least 1971 when I became director of the Conference Bureau. Until her retirement she was a major player in our staff, holding us together with remarkable skill and insight. She brought a high level of professionalism to her responsibilities and developed extraordinary relationships with the many conference groups held on the Bloomington campus. It was my good fortune to visit with her and Ross in their retirement and I left their good company feeling better about myself and the world. And as I departed I always came away with delicious treats from her kitchen. I am grateful for her friendship. She is missed by me and countless others whose lives she touched and influenced. I extend my condolences to Ross and her extended family. You all are in my prayers and thoughts.
